DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

Claims 30-35 and 37-39 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Muller et al (USPN 6,537,199 B1).

With reference to Figures 6 and 21 Muller et al discloses an ossicular prosthesis comprising a pair of jaws 34 having a semi-cylindrical inner surface for engaging opposite sides of an ossicle when implanted in a human ear, to anchor to the ossicle; a spring element 36 of a flexible material, different from the pair of jaws, operatively coupled to the jaws for biasing the jaws toward one another to provide clamping pressure, and an actuator element 19 operatively coupled to the spring element. The actuator element comprises a piston adapted to extend through an oval window when implanted in a human ear. The actuator element comprises a transducer element in the form of either a coil or a magnet of an electromagnetic actuator 13, or a piezoelectric element. With reference to Figure 10 the spring element 35 has opposite ends each received in an opening (slit) in one of the jaws to provide swivel joints that may further be surrounded by an elastomer (Figures 26-29). Additionally a spacer to temporarily hold the jaws in an open position until implanting in a human ear is completed. The spring element is of a metal material (8:25-59) selected from titanium or stainless steel in the form of a loop that extends around the actuator element (Fig. 29). The jaw may be formed of a bioactive material such as ceramic. Hydroxyapatite is well known in the art as a bioactive ceramic material.

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claim 36 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Muller in view of Muller et al (USPN 6,547,715 B1).

As discussed above Muller discloses the ossicular prosthesis as claimed. Muller however fails to disclose a spacer for maintaining the jaws in an open position until implanted. With reference to Figures 5-8 Muller ('715) teaches an ossicular prosthesis 22 comprising jaws 27,28 for engaging opposites of an ossicle 8 when implanted in a human ear and a spacer 41 that maintains the jaws in an open position (Figure 5) during delivery and allows jaws to be closed upon implantation (Figure 8), the spacer precluding unintentional movements of the jaws (5:35-50). Therefore in view of the teachings it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to have modified the prosthesis as disclosed by Muller ('199) to include a spacer as taught by Muller ('715) for maintaining the jaws in an open position during implantation to reduce the difficulties of the surgical procedure and prevent unintentional movement of the jaws.
